Premier being held accountable after patient goes missing

Woodford Metro | Halifax

An advocacy group is calling on the premier to intervene after a young man went missing upon leaving a Nova Scotia rehabilitation centre.

Landon Webb, 25, has been missing since Oct. 15, when he left the Kings Regional Rehabilitation Centre in Waterville for his allotted unsupervised community access. He didn't come back.

That was the day before Webb was supposed to be discharged.

On Wednesday, his parents pleaded with the public for information about their son, and Brenda Hardiman with Advocating Parents of Nova Scotia placed blame on the provincial department of community services.

'The department of community services, to the best of our knowledge, does not have a clause in their service provider agreements that speaks to notice of termination of care," Hardiman said at the press conference Wednesday.

"Premier Stephen McNeil, your community services minister Joanne Bernard is not doing her job very well. This re-quires your immediate intervention." Webb's mother, Brenda, said her son who has the mental capacity of a 10to 12-year-old — was aware that he was to be discharged the next day, and that

Webb had been hoping to find a small option home for her son to live in after his discharge, but had been unable to do so, and had hoped he could stay at the rehabilitation centre until she was able to.

"We don't know where he is at all," Brenda Webb said. "It could easily have been avoided by him not being in the community unsupervised and unattended. He needed supports." A department of community services spokesperson said in an email Wednesday that it can't comment on specific cases, but included a statement.

"Our staff plan for transitions of every client moving out of a facility," it read in part. "No client would be released from care without some form of support in place, whether it's direct family support at home, or an appropriate placement."

Convention brings in big cash for local businesses

Hal-Con may mean costumes, star guests and panels, but the event is also a "big plus" for downtown businesses.

From Friday to Sunday, the World Trade and Convention Centre and Scotiabank Centre will host the sixth-annual sci-fi, fantasy and gaming convention expected to bring 7,800 people to Halifax, said spokeswoman Joni Crocker.

"We definitely add to the downtown population considerably," Crocker said.

While about 7,000 attended last year, Crocker said they're expecting roughly 800 more due to the expansion into the Scotiabank Centre arena for vendors and exhibitors.

Callum Johnson, owner of Strange Adventures, said Hal-Con always makes for a busy weekend for as well as Giant Robot or Monster Comics, since people from out of town like to see what Halifax has to

Resolution to Dalhousie bike lane project pushed back

Stephanie Taylor Metro | Halifax

The on-again-off-again bike-lane pilot project along University Avenue has once again hit a bump in the road.

Hearings were scheduled to take place in Halifax Supreme Court on Tuesday and Wednesday between the Halifax Regional Municipality and a popular street vendor — known to most as the Dawgfather PhD — who filed an injunction over construction of a temporary bike lane, which was to be facilitated by Dalhousie University.

However, a municipal spokesman confirmed Wednesday the matter has been adjourned until mid-January, as preliminary matters were still underway.

'We're still bogged down in pre-trial matters, so it didn't make sense to move forward yesterday or today," Brendan Elliott said Wednesday.

Once that's done, then we would be in a position to move forward to the next level."

The vendor filed an injunction in mid-August, after previously stating his legal action was on the grounds that building a four-block protected bike lane would not only threaten his street business set up in front of the Dalhousie Student Union building but also hinder accessibility.

At that time, a university spokesperson said constructing the short-term infrastructure project would be put on hold until the matter is resolved.

No spokesperson responded to Metro's request for comment by time of publication.

But Elliott explained the university remains the project lead, with the municipality mostly assisting operationally.

"It's frustrating," said Halifax Cycling Coalition spokesperson Blair Barrington.

"It has been approved several times; there's been public engagement; all the materials have been purchased. It's frustrating.

Regional council gave the two-year pilot the green light in May. The pilot would transform both sides of University Avenue between LeMarchant and Robie streets into protected bike lanes.

That was the second time the project was approved.

Éarlier in February, approval for the project was overturned during a closed-door meeting - promoted by legal action from the same vendor - which resulted in city staff hosting an open house for public consultation.

The new hearing dates are set for Jan. 13 and 14.

Mayor granted energy crown

A conference has honoured Halifax's mayor as an international leader in urban energy.

Mike Savage was bestowed the title, President of the World Cities Partnership, on Wednesday during the organization's annual general meeting in Rio de Janeiro.

The organization touts the municipality as one of the 23 "world energy capitals" that are working to grow the global energy economy.

"Mayor Savage is an exceptional leader and a true champion for Halifax, and I'd like to congratulate him on this impressive appointment," Nova Scotia Energy Minister Michel Samson said in a release issued Wednesday.

Savage will take over as president in January 2016.

Parents seek information about their missing son

Woodford Metro | Halifax

Brenda and Darrell Webb have been walking the streets. They've been going into vacanť buildings. They've been searching everywhere they can think of for the past two weeks, looking for their son, Landon. "We don't know if he's alive or dead," Brenda Webb said Wednesday at a press conference in Halifax.

"We're just doing what we can with the resources we have, and looking for places that we think he might be or could be."

Landon Webb, 25, has been missing since Oct. 15, when he left the Kings Regional Rehabilitation Centre in Waterville for his allotted unsupervised community access, and didn't come back.

That was the day before he was supposed to be discharged from the facility.

Webb has medical issues including epilepsy, and his mother said he functions at the level of a 10- to 12-yearold. He's been without his medication since he's been missing.
Webb's parents held a press conference Wednesday to plead with the public for any information about their son.

We need the public to be vigilant, to watch for anything that may seem peculiar or strange," his mother said.

"Whether you're suspicious or it just seems odd, report it to police.

For their part, Nova Scotia RCMP said Wednesday the investigation is ongoing. Spokesman Const. Mark Skinner said police are currently following up on leads, including a tip that Webb may be in the New Glasgow or Stellarton area.

She suspects someone is harbouring him, and that he's "being encouraged and taken advantage of.'

She said, "he does and he doesn't" have a girlfriend, "it depends on time frames," and asks anyone who may be harbouring him to call police.

Ex-Moosehead pleads guilty

Kristen Lipscombe Metro | Halifax

Former Halifax Mooseheads forward Brandon Vuic has pleaded guilty to cocaine possession.

Along with amassing seven points in 56 games played, the 20-year-old from Ontario was also allegedly involved in a drinking and driving incident last season.

Police officers arrested him for impaired driving, consuming over the legal limit of 80 milligrams of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood and cocaine possession, after he allegedly crashed into a parked car last Oct. 7 in Dartmouth.

The local QMJHL club cut the 20-year-old from its roster prior to this season.

"He was sentenced on possession," Public Prosecution Service spokeswoman Chris Hansen confirmed Wednesday. "It was a conditional discharge.

Vuic entered his guilty plea in Dartmouth provincial court

Tuesday afternoon, with his new lawyer, Lyle Howe, requesting the conditional discharge. Crown attorney Eric Taylor didn't oppose that request, Hansen confirmed.

Judge Alanna Murphy also agreed with the conditional discharge, which means Vuic won't have a criminal record if he completes 12 months of probation that includes abstaining from illegal drugs and taking part in any recommended counselling, along with "a $100 victim surcharge," Hansen said.

Halifax artists and residents are gathering together Thursday to raise funds — and the roof-for Habitat for Humanity Nova Scotia.

The seventh-annual Raise a Little Hellp hosted by the Delta Barrington and Delta Halifax brings together musicians, a silent auction, and food and drink in a fundraiser on Thursday night.

"It's invaluable to Habitat for Humanity," said spokeswoman Deborah Page on Wednesday.

"They're invested in the cause, they know how important it is to Nova Scotia, and they come back year after year and really put their all into it."

Habitat for Humanity is a volunteer non-profit aimed at providing affordable home ownership for low-income Nova Scotians, who put in 500 hours of their own "sweat equity" before they assume the mortgage, said Page.

The Delta hotels have raised $530,000 for the non-profit over the past six years, Page said, which is a "huge contribution."

All funds raised over the years go to help build homes in the province, Page said, and anything raised Thursday will

Cleanup continues decades after spill

Tanker ran aground off eastern shore back in 1970

Canadian Coast Guard divers have been called in to remove thousands of litres of oil from a ship that sank 45 years ago off Nova Scotia's eastern shore.

The tanker Arrow ran aground on Cerberus Rock near Arichat, N.S., in Februarv 1970.

At the time, the wreck caused one of the worst oil spills in Canadian history, dumping about 8,000 tonnes of oil that fouled 300 kilometres of Chedabucto Bay's shoreline and killed 2,500 sea birds.

The latest cleanup was organized after a slick was spotted during a routine surveillance flight Aug. 28.

Spill response specialist Kyle Jarvis said it's unclear how much oil spilled from the tanker before the slick was spotted.

"We're trying to remove as much as we can and keep everything safe for the environment," he said in an interview from aboard the barge that is collecting the oil.

Before the pumping started, divers placed a temporary neoprene patch on the hull to stop the leaking.

The wreck is under 20 metres of water.

"So far, so good," said Jarvis. "Now we're doing everything we can to prevent further leaks ... what we're doing seems to be working."

Jarvis said hé didn't know how much oil will be recovered from the Arrow or how long the operation will take.

However, he said the progress of the cleanup will largely depend on the weather.

Stormy conditions are expected to move into the area Thursday as the remnants of hurricane Patricia bring heavy rain and strong winds gusting at 70 kilometres per hour in the morning.

In 1970, the Liberian-flagged vessel was delivering 16,200 tonnes of oil from Venezuela to the pulp mill at Point Tupper, N.S., when it ran into the reef named for the three-headed dog that guards the mythical gates of Hades.

The ship was operating with an inaccurate compass, quirky radar and a depth sounder that hadn't worked for months.

The Arrow's captain, George Anastasopoulos, was six degrees off course and almost two kilometres closer to the reef than he thought.

Iğnoring what he thought were spurious signals from the radar, the captain, his mate and a lookout watched for Cerberus Rock only on the starboard side. The Arrow crashed straight into the reef at a barely reduced speed of 12 knots. at 9:35 a.m. on Feb. 4, 1970.

Much of the oil on the ship was pumped out by salvagers, but some remained.

BUSINESS LOANS PROGRAM

N.S. taxpayers on the hook until 2034

It is a tiger,

if you will, with a long tail.

Catherine Woodman

Nova Scotia taxpayers will be paying for a defunct provincial business funding program for six years more than originally expected and at a cost higher than recently predicted.

The Nova Scotia Jobs Fund was eliminated by the Liberal government in 2014, and estimates released in July predicted taxpayers would foot the bill for about $700 million in existing business deals until 2028.

The timeline estimate has now been revised to 2034 and the overall cost estimate has jumped by $192 million. Business Nova Scotia deputy minister Catherine Woodman told the legislature's public accounts committee Wednesday that the cost of continuing deals is estimated at $32 million a year, with a cumulative five-year cost of $159 million and a total com-

"We are honouring our previous commitments and it's fairly complex and so it (the fund) has to be managed carefully," said Woodman.

mitment of $892 million.

The cabinet-controlled fund created by the former NDP government provided business loans to a host of companies such as Irving Shipbuilding, and to paper mills in Pictou County and Port Hawkesbury.

Woodman told the committee 78 companies were part of a fund that included 112 accounts when the program was discontinued.

However, she couldn't provide opposition committee members with information about such things as the total value of the commitments, the corporate tax revenue generated, and the number of direct jobs created.

The lack of detail on those and other questions prompted NDP committee member Maureen MacDonald to take a shot at the Liberal government.

"This is a government that seems to know the cost of everything and the value of nothing," MacDonald said.

Outside the hearing Woodman said the discrepancy in the overall cost estimates was the result of a more thorough evaluation of the deals.

A potentially generation-defining international conference in Paris begins less than a month after Justin Trudeau becomes prime minister.

The UN conference on climate change, which begins Nov. 30, will see countries try to negotiate post-2020 targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

However, according to at least one climate policy expert, Trudeau won't actually have to do much there.

"Internationally, he's got it made because he's not Stephen Harper, so he will be loved," said Mark Jaccard, who is also a professor at Simon Fraser University's School of Resource and Environmental Management in Burnaby, B.C. "All he has to do is sound enthusiastic and say we'll do our part."

During the election campaign, Trudeau committed to attending the Paris climate conference and bringing the premiers with him. In his first post-election press conference last week, Trudeau said he had already spoken with a number of premiers about attending the conference, and that "Canada's years of being a less-than-enthusiastic actor on the climate change file are behind us."

The hard work really begins after Paris.

Trudeau also promised to hold a first ministers' meeting within 90 days to create a "pan-Canadian framework" for combatting climate change, including national emissions reduction

Jaccard, who served on the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and on Canada's National Roundtable on the Environment and the Economy, said there's more provincial will to tackle the problem than in the past. For example, in the era of the Kyoto Accord, then-prime minister Jean Chretien had "an antagonistic government in Alberta, an almost disinterested government in Quebec, and Saskatchewan and B.C. were not that keen," Jaccard said.

Now, Quebec has a cap-and-trade system. Ontario says it's negotiating its way in to link with Quebec and California. B.C. has a carbon tax, and Alberta has promised more action on greenhouse gases.

The solution now to bring everybody under the same system is to ensure that it doesn't inadvertently become a tool of redistribution," Jaccard said. "(Trudeau) will have to figure out how to mesh divergent policies, bring laggards into some kind of national system, and then start to have binding cap requirements that make sense in terms of global goals."

The Liberals would give the provinces flexibility to set their own carbon pricing systems.

Louise Comeau, Climate Action Network Canada executive director, is "cautiously optimistic" about Trudeau's approach, but said "there's a lot of detail that needs to be filled in."

"You have to have some flexibility," she said. "But there's a difference between flexibility and loopholes. We're looking really hard here to see, is he serious?'

Trudeau should go to Paris promising to review the previous government's commitment of 30 per cent reductions by 2030, Comeau said, and agree to five-year reviews of any signed agreement.

Jean Charest

One thing on which sovereigntists and federalists can agree some 20 years after the 1995 referendum is that the Quebec independence movement — in one form or another — will likely never go away.

Prominent sovereigntists say their side — the Yes side — would have won if the federal government had stayed away and not tried to help the No campaign, particularly regarding the controversial Unity Rally in Montreal three days before the Oct. 30, 1995, vote.

Federalists, meanwhile, argue the defeat of the Yes side in 1995 - and in the preceding referendum of 1980 — is due to a stubbornyet-obvious reality: Canada's need to respect that. flexible, federal system works.

"There will continue to be a group of people in Quebec who want to separate and we need to respect that and understand that," said former Quebec premier Jean Charest, who was the leader of the federal Progressive Conservative Party of Canada in 1995.

'But the country works. There is the government of the day and there may be the leaders of the day but in the end there is our - the resilience of the Sovereigntist and former Quebec premier Bernard Landry, however, says there is an equal-yet-opposite, obvious reality. Six months before the 1995 vote the Yes side was at 39 per cent in the polls, Landry said. "And a few months later we were at 50 per cent.

"Today, the polls say sovereignty is at 40 per cent support. The idea of Quebec independence is extremely powerful and logical. If sovereignty comes back in the news and we have a good campaign, I think Quebec will have its place at the United Nations."

What new flashpoint could trigger a resurgence of support for sovereignty is anyone's guess, but events leading up to the last referendum were due to several specific failures, explains John Parisella, chief of staff to two Quebec premiers and a strategic adviser to the No campaign.

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau failed to get Quebec's signature on the constitution in 1982, which led to another failure by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney years later to pass the Meech Lake Accord, which was a series of proposals to assuage Quebec's frustrations with the federalist system. They don't have a definition of scary, they just don't want costumes that will frighten the kindergarten children," said Hjelsvold.

'Well, what scares one kindergartner is like a joke to the next one. Who makes that distinction?"

Principals set the costume policy, so Halloween is celebrated in a variety of ways throughout the CBE.

Because students may come from a range of different backgrounds and experiences, the CBE said: "It is also not uncommon for schools to ask students to avoid wearing costumes which are violent in nature or might limit the mobility of

Senator still facing fraud and breach of trust charges

Sen. Patrick Brazeau said Wednesday he's focused on getting back to the upper chamber "as quickly as possible" after a Quebec judge agreed to grant him an unconditional discharge on assault and drug charges.

"This nightmare, I've been living with this for two-and-ahalf years and it's finally over," Brazeau said outside the courtroom in Gatineau, Que., after the decision came down

Partway through the trial, Brazeau pleaded to reduced charges of assault and possession of cocaine, while the more serious charge of sexual assault was dropped due to a lack of evidence.

Quebec Court Judge Valmont Beaulieu read a lengthy decision that outlined why he agreed with the joint recommendation of the Crown prosecutor and Brazeau's lawyer, who urged him to grant a discharge.

The victim did not make a statement to the court before the sentencing.

Beaulieu emphasized certain extenuating circumstances, including that Brazeau had lived for several months under the

"Each time any individual - regardless of colour, creed or anything— in this country gets accusations of sexual assault, obviously it's going to taint that person's reputation,' Brazeau said.

Brazeau still faces a criminal trial for fraud and breach of trust arising from his Senate living expenses, scheduled to take place in March 2016. The trial of Sen. Mike Duffy, which involves similar issues, is set to resume next month.

Calamities breed rumour in social-media age

A wildly inaccurate rumour flashed through social media in the panicked aftermath of the Boston Marathon bombings because police did not provide information on the suspects for days, a new study concludes.

The study on the generation and debunking of untruths, commissioned by Defence Research and Development Canada, was recently completed by Humansystems Inc. of Guelph, Ont. The findings could influence the Canadian military's thinking on information-related tactics.

When a gunman killed a soldier at the National War Memorial on Oct. 22, 2014, false reports began circulating in cyberspace about armed accomplices and more shots ringing out.

At least four major rumours quickly turned up on social media such as Twitter when two brothers detonated pressure cooker bombs a year earlier near the finish line of the Boston Marathon, killing three and injuring more than 250.

"Rumours may have propagated to the extent they did because they were believable and helped to make sense of the situation," the study says.

As a result, the authors say, a rumour that a woman running the marathon was killed before her boyfriend could propose at the finish line was believable because such proposals are relatively common and it served to make sense of the question, "Who were the

Kids suspended more often than white students

Until she attended a five-yearold's birthday party, Tunette Powell was not inclined to blame her problems on the colour of her skin.

Her four-year-old son JJ had been suspended three times from his Nebraska preschool, twice for throwing chairs and once for spitting. She didn't think it was a good idea to suspend tiny kids, but she thought it was normal.

Then, sitting in a living room last March as JJ played with his pals, she got to talking with a group of white moms. "They were shocked that my kid was being suspended. Even with the reasons," said Powell, 29. "They said, 'Well, my kid hit someone in the face and that kid had to go to the hospital, and all I got was a phone call.' They kept on telling me all the things their kid was doing. And at some point it was like, 'What else could there be?'

The month of the birthday party, the U.S. Department of Education released a set of figures that confirmed Powell's suspicions. Black children made up 18 per cent of the country's public preschool students but 42 per cent of the students suspended, 48 per cent of the students suspended more than once.

This week's viral video of a South Carolina police officer violently throwing a black high school student to the ground has reignited the U.S. discussion of the "school-to-prison pipeline": the zero-tolerance policies, discretionary "defiance" suspensions and copsin-schools programs and that push kids, especially black kids, into the criminal justice system.

Last year's government report led some advocates to start using an amended phrase: preschool-to-prison pipeline. The harsh discipline — and the disproportionate discipline starts not long after kids are done potty training.

Routine lube job, in space

NASA's yearlong spaceman, Scott Kelly, chalked up his first spacewalk Wednesday just hours before he sets a record for the nation's longest trip off the planet.

Kelly found himself repeatedly wiping away grease while lubricating snares on the tip of the International Space Station's big robot arm. The job was more time-consuming than expected and couldn't be completed.

"It's so messy," Kelly said.

Kelly and fellow spacewalker Kjell Lindgren spent seven hours outside tackling a long overdue list of maintenance chores. In addition to the lube work, they routed cable for a future docking port, removed insulation from an electronic switching unit, and covered an antimatter and dark matter detector.

Thursday morning, Kelly will break the American record for NASA's longest single space shot. That 215-day record — more than seven months - was set in 2007. Kelly has been living at the orbiting lab since March. He is to remain there until March 2016.

EMMA TEITEL: ON RESEARCH FATIGUE

It seems every day the news produces a study indicating our life choices will result in illness or untimely death — followed directly by a contradictory report.

"Find what you love and let it kill you" is a quote attributed to Charles Bukowski (though no one knows whether he actually said it) and a mantra recited by starving artists who pursue their passion in the face of poverty. This week though, it could be the mantra of bacon lovers.

Bacon is one of the most adored foods on the planet, but its gradual effects, according to new findings by the World Health Organization, are potentially cancerinducing. According to WHO, which analyzed evidence linking the consumption of processed meats like bacon, hotdogs, and sausages to cancer, a "50 gram portion of processed meat eaten daily increases the risk of colorectal cancer by 18 per cent."

You might think, well big deal, bacon never had a great reputation to begin with (its image is synonymous with obesity, heart attack, and Homer Simpson) but consider this: 50 grams of processed meat isn't even close to a Homer Simpson-sized portion. In fact, 50 grams of bacon amounts to roughly only two slices - and who can honestly eat less than two slices of bacon?

Nobody. This is why the WHO findings have gone astronomically viral, inspiring doom-laden headlines at an alarming rate, some of which include: "Bacon kills?" and "Put down the hotdogs and salami." Coupled with this bacon scare is additional bad news for processed meat lovers: Clear Food, a lab that analyzes food "at a molecular level," recently released a study indicating two per cent of the hotdogs they tested contained human DNA. (Great news: Your love of processed meat may not only kill you; it may also turn you into a cannibal).

Mushatt Jones "keeps a steady diet of bacon, eggs and grits for breakfast," and hangs a sign in her kitchen that reads Bacon makes everything better." Processed meat won't give you cancer; it will make you immortal!

I don't know about you, but I find this public-health news

BAD BREAKFAST? Though people may be initially put off by the idea of a plateful of carcinogens, they tend to return to their regular habits a short time after damning research is publicized, studies show. EJWHITE/ISTOCK

In other uplifting public health news this month, a meat sauce sold in Ontario and Quebec grocery stores was recalled because it may contain dangerous bacteria.

It seems every day the news cycle produces a study indicating that our life choices will result in illness or untimely death — followed directly by a contradictory report or article explaining why the original study is inaccurate, overblown or misguided.

Take the recent influx of news stories about senior citizens who - contrary to the WHO finding — have lived long, happy lives chock full of bacon. According to USA Today, 116-year-old Susannah cycle extremely confusing and exhausting. It's a feeling I've dubbed "research fatigue," and I'm probably not the only person suffering.

"They've actually done studies to show that people start to tune out when they hear these alarmist headlines about 'everything causes cancer," says Tim Caulfield, University of Alberta professor and Canada Research Chair in Health Law and Policy. "If the message is too confusing and too conflicting, people stop listening. These conflicting stories make it hard for people to hear the truth through the noise."

So what is the truth? If you don't eat bacon every day, you are probably OK. Caulfield says it's important for people to understand the difference between "relative risk" and 'absolute risk."

"Your absolute risk of being diagnosed with colon cancer throughout your lifetime is 4 per cent to 5 per cent," he says. This means excessive bacon eating, according to the WHO finding, can increase your risk of cancer by "18 per cent out of 4 to 5 per cent." In those terms, "the absolute increase in risk isn't really that much," says Caulfield.

The sad thing is that even when people aren't affected by research fatigue — i.e. when they do try to change their eating habits, they rarely succeed. "There may be a momentary shift," says Caulfield, in which people eat healthier, but "after a little bit of time they regress back to their old behaviour."

For now, the bacon train seems to be chugging along just fine. Andrew Motta, owner of Toronto restaurant Bacon Nation, home of the "peanut butter bacon milkshake," says he has received no complaints from customers worried about the WHO finding. In his words: "You hear bacon is bad today and next week, it's going to be 'nine healthy reasons you should eat bacon.' You've just gotta take it with a grain of salt." Or if you're so inclined, a bucketload.

There's no shame in crying over abuse allegations at Val d'Or

You would have to be there, in Val d'Or, Que., to claim, as many have, that the town is in

But clearly it is the next flashpoint for fury over the treatment of indigenous Canadians.

The tensions mounting in Val d'Or, population 32,000, are about much more than one set of allegations of police sexually and physically abusing indigenous women.

So, too, are the tears of the provincial public safety minister, shed in response to those allegations, much more than a single show of emotion. In fact, her tears are pivotal.

Lise Theriault was asked how the claims made her feel. She hesitated. Tears welled. Her voice wavered when she answered: "As shocked as the rest of the population."

Watching her, my mind flew to a few weeks ago, when I'd walked through a memorial for missing and murdered indigenous women in Ottawa. It's set up as a semicircle, lined with rows of multicoloured moccasin uppers waiting to be sewn in, a metaphor for the unfinished lives.

The travelling exhibit (booked, incredibly, through 2019) is a kind of ceremony, and not even a tear is inconsequential. Used tissues are collected and included in a ceremonial fire. I watched my cousin - a young mother cry and cry, overcome.

Tears help participants viscerally, physically "share

... the grieving process all the families and friends have gone through," so it feels like something real instead of a news item, says Kara Louttit, who was raised in Val d'Or and volunteers with the memorial, Walking with Our Sisters. That's what makes Theriault's moment of emotion so powerful. She didn't simply call the allegations upsetting. She actually got upset.

Of course, not all see it that way. Parti Quebecois members have called for her resignation, citing in part her "erratic" behaviour. Police officers felt betrayed. I can see why they are demanding to be presumed innocent.

But I can also see why many others presume the complainants are telling the truth.

Chastising the minister for her tears ignores the wider injustice she is responding to, the pervasive oppression of indigenous people.

Politicians cry over many things - their grandmothers, their colleagues, their own jobs. Theriault cried for an often disempowered and alienated few.

There will be an investigation - by Montreal police, with independent oversight - and officers will have the fullness of our justice system to counter the allegations.

They've always had that, plus the power offered to them as officers in the first place. Now, indigenous women wielding a new, belated power: Recognition.

Has Alber Elbaz guit Lanvin for fashion's revolving Dior?

Inside Garance Doré's style

What blogging taught fashion insider about love, style, life

Henrietta Walmark Metro | Canada

Style influencer and fashion blogger Garance Doré has added author to her list of accomplishments with the publication of her book, Love Style Life (Spiegel & Grau, $39).

The French illustrator and photographer is the only blogger to win the Council of Fashion Designers of America Eugenia Sheppard Media Award (an award she shared with her former boyfriend Scott Schuman a.k.a. The Sartorialist). She produced a Pardon My French video series and her own line of stationery, as well as collaborating with luxury shirt brand Equipment on a capsule collection featuring her signature illustrations.

So why write a book, Metro asked Doré in a phone interview from New York City where her studio is based.

"It took me a long time to come up with the right idea of what I wanted to do because the blog is such a great way to express yourself. It's not like I was in need of more self expression," says Doré, laughing. But the idea of a book is that it's a wonderful self-contained object."

The book is gorgeous. Compact and bound in a soft embossed cover the colour of ballet slippers, Love Style Life feels as intimate as a personal notebook. Like Doré's eponymous blog, the memoir is packed with her street photography, distinctive script and illustrations and candid storytelling.

Describing her blog as an ongoing story where it's often hard to see the big picture, she says: "With a book you can be much more clear about your message and what you want to say. That's why I wanted to do a book."

Doré built her message into the structure

We asked Doré what about her is typically French. "I'm very frank," she says. "I say things ... In America, people are actually more scared of their feelings and emotions."

Then we asked what is most American about her.

"My boyfriend," Doré says, laughing. "Oh my god, there are so many things. First, I say 'oh my god' all the time. My most American thing I do is drink my coffee from a (take-out) cup. That's very American."

of Love Style Life. She wanted to talk about style not only because her quest for style brought her to where she is today, but also because of what she learned during a decade of blogging.

What I love about the people that inspire me to take their photo I realized, is it's not so much about the clothing that they wear. It's that the clothes are an expression of who they are," she says. "That is real style."

The book is divided into five sections: Doré describes Style as the exterior, Métier as career, Beauty as our intimate relationship with ourselves, Elegance as how to be in the world, and, finally, there is Love.

"If you look at the structure," she says, "it's from the outside to the inside. That's a journey that I've been through and style is the sum of all that."

Doré hopes readers will get to see her in a different light through the book. "To be very honest," she says, "there are some subjects I don't really touch on the blog because of the nature of the Internet, and I go into that world." She reveals the arc of her high-profile relationship with fellow blogger Schuman, and much more about her personal life, from teenage loves to a serious romance with a woman.

"I'm trying to share and to be inspiring because when I was young I couldn't find people that inspired me to be myself," says Dore, "(people) that didn't do the things they were sup-posed to do, but it was still OK."

Pulitzer winner dives into the Salem witch trials

One night, if the 1692 court confession is to be believed, Ann Foster and Martha Carrier flew through the Massachusetts sky on a pole. Earlier the same year, two young girls, who claimed they were bitten and pinched by "invisible agents," were witnessed convulsing and speaking gibberish. After relentless interrogation, their family's slave admitted to practicing witchcraft on the children, at the request of a satanic man who appeared under the guise of several animals.

As we prepare for this weekend's invasion of adorable ghosts and goblins, it's hard to imagine that a little more than 300 years ago the fear of witches would lead to these incredible stories and to widespread terror in the Puritan New England colony. Within just a few months, 14 women, five men and two dogs — thought to be their diabolical accomplices — would be executed in what has become one of the most famous but misunderstood trials in American history.

The unfortunate mélange of circumstances that led up to the trials is the subject of celebrated Pulitzer Prize-winning historical biographer Stacy Schiff's fascinating new book, The Witches: Salem, 1692, published by Little Brown. Schiff — whose last book, Cleopatra: A Life, analyzed the life of the last queen of Egypt — researched court documents, archives and personal correspondences in hopes of contextualizing the circumstances that led to the roller-coasting hysteria and accusations of the Salem

These days, the only witches residing in the Massachusetts town are related to tourist attractions, but Schiff says that growing up in the state made its history hard to escape. She remembers reading Arthur Miller's play, The Crucible, and the work of Salem native Nathaniel Hawthorn, but was really drawn to the story as a captivating historical moment.

This is the locked-room drama that I wasn't certain we had ever entirely unpacked, and at the same time it was a moment where women played a prominent role," she says. "I had just come off of Cleopatra and thinking still about women's voices, and when women are able to articulate what they think."

Schiff believes the strain of the rigid Puritan religion, combined with widespread poverty and political uncertainty, and residual trauma from the Indian War, led to the villagers — mostly women — turning on each other. The trials also followed one of the most brutal winters on record, which Schiff speculates contributed to the atmosphere. "I do think that being indoors for those long periods of time especially for women — plays a role certainly in what you begin to see and how you begin to feel," Schiff says. SUE CARTER/METRO

FINDING WINNI

Bear behind the tale

Before there was Pooh, Tigger or Eeyore, there was a bear cub and a helpful veterinarian pal, both from Canada. The new children's book Finding Winnie, which is being eyed for a film adaptation, tells the real Canadian story that inspired A. A. Milne's classic Winnie-the-Pooh tales.

The author is Toronto-based Lindsay Mattick, whose greatgrandfather was that very vet, Harry Colebourn of Winnipeg.

"I want people who love Winnie-the-Pooh to understand that the real story behind her is just as beautiful and just as amazing," said Mattick, who has already sold the big-screen rights to the newly published book.

"I'm still blown away that, while a lot of people in Canada certainly know the story and know the history now, around the world it's really still not known.

"People don't even realize that there was a real bear."

Finding Winnie: The True Story of the World's Most Famous Bear is told through a bedtime story session between a mother and her young son, Cole.

As the mother tells Cole in the book, Colebourn was sent away from Winnipeg in 1914 to tend to soldiers' horses overseas. During a stop on a train platform in White River, Ont., he met a man sitting with a gentle black bear cub and gave him $20 for it, thinking he could take good care of it along his journeys.

Colebourn and the soldiers bonded with and trained the cub, which he called Winnipeg (Winnie). She even became the mascot of the 2nd Canadian Infantry Brigade.

But Colebourn realized he eventually had to give her up, so he brought her to the London Zoo, where he later

That's where a young boy named Christopher Robin Milne grew to love her — a bond that eventually inspired his dad, Alan Alexander Milne, to write Winnie-the-Pooh.

Sophie Blackall illustrates the book, which includes archival photos.

"There are two main emotional takeaways from the book: one is the dedication, which is this idea that you never know the impact that one small loving gesture can have," said Mattick.

The other takeaway is "sometimes to let one new story begin, another one needs to end," she

Marc Jacobs' party pinch | Khloe kind of mad at People

DIVORCE FILING

It's still unclear whether Odom and Kardashian are back together

So there's this new interview with Khloe Kardashian in People magazine where she basically says that even though she and Lamar Odom have called off their divorce, it doesn't mean they're actually back together. Except Kardashian herself takes issue with it since most of the interview happened before Odom's collapse, despite how the story is presented.

'My people cover, I shot and interviewed for prior to all the events that happened," she clarified on Twitter. "I had to do a follow-up five-minute phoner after the events only because I was contracted to. I canceled my book tour to avoid this attention." Huh. It's not like a Kardashian to avoid attention.

So what was it the magazine printed that she take such issue with?

Probably this: "It's out in the media that we are back together, but I wish people understood that's not in our thought process right now. There are too many other important things, too many medical things. It's not even in our brains thinking about us as a couple or having a relationship right now.

Still, Kardashian and Odom have filed a court petition dismissing a divorce filing. "I pulled back on the divorce because there is no rush for it," she told the magazine. "For medical decisions and a ton of other things, it's just smarter that it's put on hold. But that does not mean I'm back with Lamar Only time will tell.'

According to search warrant records, Odom is believed to have overdosed on cocaine and other drugs before he was found unconscious at the Love Ranch brothel in Crystal, Nevada. He was hospitalized in Las Vegas and transferred to Los Angeles, where his family said on Oct. 22 that he was undergoing therapy and showing improvement.

Kardashian said Odom has a long road to recovery. "Every hour is different," she said. "It goes up and it goes down. Things are progressing, but it's a very serious situation.'

A clerk granted an Oct. 21 request to dismiss their divorce filing from December 2013 in such a way that the

WAYS MEMPHIS STYLE IS MAKING A COMEBACK

First launched in the 1980s by leading Italian designer Ettore Sottsass, the Memphis movement, characterized by vibrant colours and extravagant forms, ended the era of functional sobriety in interior decoration. Kartell paid tribute to the designer through an exhibit at the Milan Furniture Fair in April, and a number of designers are re-appropriating the codes of the movement. AFP

"Home autour du monde" ("Home around the world") by Bensimon has also jumped onto the Memphis trend bandwagon and designed a four-piece plate service (€60, $87 CDN) and a pizza plate (€19, $28 CDN), each printed with a colourful camembert.

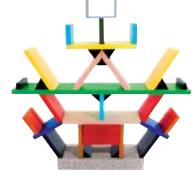

Presented at the London Design Festival in September within the framework of the 100% Norway initiative that showcased designers from Norway, the Hoff couch is colourful and modular. Created by designers Morten Jonas and Kioshi Yamamoto, the sofa can take on various shapes, sizes and colours. (Price on demand)

Apps to keep your business flowing

Download these options to keep you on track, on time and on budget

Marc Saltzman

While today's smartphones have evolved into digital Swiss Army Knives — capable of messaging and surfing, music and games, pictures and video, GPS navigation, and more — it's apps that truly customizes the user experience.

This is especially true for smallto medium-sized businesses in need of apps to help remain productive — even while travelling in another city or country.

Not only are there hundreds of thousands to download from Apple's App Store and Google Play for Android devices, but many of them are free or close to it. Here's a look at a few notable suggestions.

Dually noted

Got a million-dollar idea? Come up with the perfect sales pitch for a finicky client? Envision what the new store extension should look like? Type, sketch or speak inside of Evernote (free for all major platforms) and all of your notes will be synchronized with your PC or Mac for safe keeping.

Dubbed "the workspace for your life's work," Evernote lets you drag and drop web pages, photos and audio clips onto your digital canvas to flesh out your ideas. You can even take a picture of book or magazine text and have it converted into text, making it a convenient solution for saving content and even searchable by keyword. Evernote works with many other apps, too, such as DocuSign, Scanner Pro and Sunrise Calendar.

Remote possibilities

Available for multiple mobile and desktop platforms, Splashtop Remote lets you log in to another computer wirelessly from your smartphone, tablet or computer, to see and control the remote PC or Mac as if you were sitting in front of it. It's not the first solution to do this, mind you, but Splashtop does one better by letting you stream full-motion video and audio from your computer to the smartphone or tablet (those bored in a hotel room can log into their work or home computer to stream TV shows). Encrypted for added security, Splashtop Remote also lets you access your desktop's web browser to surf to sites with Flash — something that's not as easy on iOS devices. Use Splashtop for free on the same network or pay $16.99/year for the iPad and iPhone versions.

Offsite done right

Create one central and secure place to hold all your "stuff" and access it all on multiple devices this is the idea behind Dropbox (free; for all major platforms), the popular cloud solution for storing, accessing and sharing your documents while on the go. Once you log into your account — from virtually any Internet-connected device over cellular or Wi-Fi connectivity - open, edit and save documents as if they were stored locally. Similarly, instead of clogging someone's inbox with a huge file, send them a link to access what they need. Have some downtime? You can even stream music and movies right from Dropbox. The basic (2GB) account is free, but you can upgrade to 1 terabyte (TB) for $11.99/month or $119/year.

Parlez-vous Français? Hablas Espanol? Sprechen Sie Deutsch? A must-have for global jetsetters, Duolingo is a free download (iOS, Android, Windows) that helps you tackle languages including French, Spanish, German, Italian, English, and many others.

With accessible bite-sized lessons, you'll start off matching words with pictures, hearing what they sound like and saying words into your phone or tablet. Duolingo also rewards you with XP (experience) points and hearts, adding a fun and motivational "gamification" element.

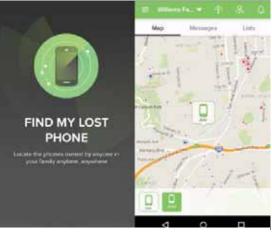

To serve and protect

It's crucial to set up a remote wipe for your phone — just in case it's lost or stolen — to prevent your information falling into the wrong hands. Free apps such as Find My iPhone (iOS), Android Device Manager (Android), BlackBerry Protect (BlackBerry) and Find My Phone (Windows Phone) let you remotely lock your device, display a message ("Please call me for a reward"), wipe the data clean, and/or track it on a map.

While these apps work, there's a catch: All four require you to set it up ahead of time. There's also smart third-party solutions that can track n' wipe, including Symantec's Norton Security.

Save cash when travelling using your mobile device

When travelling for work or play, you no doubt have your smartphone along for the ride.

After all, your pocket-sized companion helps keep you organized, connected, productive and entertained while on the go. A mobile phone is also your GPS navigation device, camera and activity tracker.

Problem is, you're probably afraid to use your phone outside of Canada — for calls, texts and data (email, web browsing) - especially given the horror stories of travellers coming home to an astronomical wireless bill. As long as you take heed to these following tips, you won't need to suffer from "phone bill phobia."

Contact your carrier

Look into a smart travel plan before you go. You might be surprised how affordable these new plans are. Rogers, for example, now offers a $5/day unlimited talk, text and data plan for U.S. visitors. Smaller players like Wind also offers aggressive packages, such as unlimited data, text and up to 2,400 minutes of Canada-U.S.-wide talk for $15/month. Tell your carrier where you're going and push for the best rate possible, based on how long you need it and whether you need talk, text or data (or all of the above).

Don't be afraid to use your cellphone when travelling iust learn how. SHUTTERSTOOK

Seek free Wi-Fi

Use free Wi-Fi hotspots - found in coffee shops, hotel lobbies and airports - instead of cellular connectivity. You can upload pics to social media, read email and browse the web - but resist tasks like online banking or shopping until you're on a secure connection back at home. Pro tip: You can also use Wi-Fi to make free phone calls; free apps like magic-App (for iOS and Android) let you make unlimited local and long distance calls to U.S. and Canadian landlines and mobile phones.

Disable "push" mail, apps If you don't want to turn off "data roaming" altogether (found in the Options/Settings section of your phone), you should at least disable you email's "push" feature.

"ȟush" refers to pushing email to your device when it arrives in your inbox instead of you manually "pulling" it down from the server. iPhone users can turn off "Fetch New Data" in the Mail, Contacts, Calendars settings, while Android users can disable the "Sync" option in the mail app's settings. Similarly, temporarily disable push notifications for apps that support it, such as live sports scores and news headlines, as it also eats up data.

Consider text, IM

If you want to stay in touch while on the go, use text messaging or instant messaging - BBM, WhatsApp, Kik, Skype, iMessage, Google Hangouts, Viber or Facebook Messenger – as opposed to making a voice call over cellular. Why? It's a lot quicker and cheaper.

After all, there's a lot less "small talk" when chatting via typed words opposed to a phone call. Also, remember that all incoming texts are free, so don't stress if you receive one while out of Canada — just don't reply if you don't want to be charged by your carrier.

Herd fall behind early to Titan in loss

Kristen Lipscombe Metro | Halifax

The Halifax Mooseheads took too long to find their stride Wednesday night on the road, dropping a 5-3 decision to division rivals the Acadie-Bathurst Titan despite a decent late-game comeback attempt.

Both Timo Meier and Danny Moynihan contributed to all three of Halifax's goals, but the Mooseheads were already down four before they could crack the scoreboard at 17:25 in the second period.

"They scored early and we kind of got out of our structure a bit trying to do too much," Herd head coach Dominique Ducharme said after his team's tough loss, which played out in front of 1,192 spectators at Centre régional K.C. Irving in Bathurst, N.B.

"We were gambling way too much," he said.

Jeffrey Truchon-Viel, named first star of the game, opened the scoring for Acadie-Bathurst just 43 seconds after puck drop, his first of two goals on the night, and in the first half of the game. Jordan Maher also had one in the first, while Christophe Boivin gave the Titans that solid 4-0 lead at 11:09 in the second period.

With Moynihan notching the Herd's first of the night late in the middle frame, on an assist from Meier to make it 4-1 after forty minutes, Ducharme told his players "we have to keep it going" before they stepped on the ice for the third period.

Ducharme said his Mooseheads "did a fairly good job" of picking up the pace after falling early in the game, but added "it just wasn't enough.'

"It was too little, too late," he said.

The Mooseheads continue west this weekend, to take on the Quebec Remparts on Friday

With a 6-10-1-1 record so far, the Mooseheads are currently in 16th place in the QMJHL, fifth in the Maritimes Division. 'Excited' Chan to reignite Hanyu rivalry after hiatus

Torontonian ready to battle Japanese ace at event in Alberta

It might be the fiercest rivalry in figure skating.

Almost two years after Patrick Chan stepped off the Sochi Olympic ice beaten and heartbroken, having lost gold to Japan's Yuzuru Hanyu, the two face off once again at this week's Skate Canada International in Lethbridge, Alta.

It's Chan's first major international competition since taking a year off. It's also the first time he'll compete against his young Japanese rival since

"I'm excited ... just for the sheer adrenalin rush,' Chan said. "I don't think it could have worked out better. It will be a great comparison to see ... first of all, someone who's been extremely successful since the Olympics and continued to dominate (Hanyu), and someone who's had a year off, and has been successful in different ways."

Chan looked to have gold in his grasp in Sochi, after a flawed program by Hanyu. But Chan faltered as well, and the threetime world champion walked away from competition to consider his future after his secondplace finish.

He didn't stray far though. Chan, who said he accepted the results from the Olympics "a long time ago," skated on several show tours, which took him around the world and saw him perform several times a week.

Hanyu, meanwhile, continued to compete after Sochi and finished second behind Spain's Javier Fernandez at the world championships last March.

Chan has eased himself back into competing by skating in a couple of smaller events, including the Japan Open where he had "a banana-peel slip' just seconds into his long program, and then didn't land a quad. He finished third.

"I was nervous and wasn't comfortable in the competition environment anymore,' he said. "I have to get back into the world of competitive skating as opposed to show skating, it's very different, and the only way to get better at it, and to get more comfortable is to keep competing.

He unveiled his new short program - to Michael Buble's version of Mack the Knife — at a minor competition in Quebec.

The 24-year-old from Toronto is taking a patient approach to this season. It might take some time before he can reel off his big quad jumps. But he said his sights are set firmly on the world championships in Boston in March.

Beeston silent on future of Jays' GM

Outgoing Blue Jays president Paul Beeston says he won't comment on the future of general manager Alex Anthopoulos because "Alex always likes to keeps his affairs private and I think I have to respect that."

"At some point in time I may be prepared to talk about it. But I think right now I would say I've got nothing to say about it," Beeston said Wednesday in a radio appearance on Sportsnet 590 The Fan. "I just hope it all works out.'

Anthopoulos, whose deal expires this week, deflected questions about his contract status during his season wrapup news conference Monday.

The appropriate time is not today.

Alex Anthopoulos when asked about his contract at a news conference Monday

"That will be addressed at the appropriate time," Anthopoulos said then. "The appropriate time is not today."

He will be dealing with new Toronto president Mark Shapiro, who is set to succeed the retiring Beeston. "There is not anything I'm going to say about Alex other than the fact that his affairs are private," Beeston said.

Beeston did acknowledge that Anthopoulos is "kind of my horse." Anthopoulos, then assistant GM, took over after Beeston fired J.P. Ricciardi as general manager in 2009. He helped the Jays to the American League Championship Series this season with a string of high-profile moves at the trade

"I've watched this man grow into the job," Beeston said. "It's very funny that after six years he is kind of like what a player would be — he's kind of a free agent in some respects. He is in his best years right now. He has learned a lot from his mistakes. We all make mistakes - some were public, some that aren't public. He's learned from that, he doesn't make the same mistake twice. And he's got guts, he's got everything else. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The Browns' quarterback situation — always convoluted — is even more of a mess.

With Josh McCown unable to throw because of a right shoulder injury sustained last week when he was roughed up in St. Louis, the Browns don't know yet if he'll be able to start Sunday when they host Arizona. And McCown's injury isn't the team's only QB concern.

against the Rams, was expected to meet Wednesday with league investigators, who are looking into whether he violated the personal conduct policy during an Oct. 12 argument with his girlfriend. According to an Avon, Ohio, police report, Colleen Crowley accused Manziel of hitting her and pushing her head against his car's window during their argument.

Browns coach Mike Pettine described Manziel's meeting as "imminent" before the team's practice. Manziel was not in the locker-room during the time it was open to reporters following the workout, but the 2012 Heisman Trophy winner was seen in a hallway near the entrance to the team's facility.

Pettine did not divulge the time or place of Manziel's appointment, but confirmed the league hopes to have its inquiry wrapped up quickly.

"There's a sense of urgency to it," said Pettine, who was asked if he was confident Manziel would be available for Sunday's game. "We'll just wait and see. The league has its protocol on how they handle these situations, and we've been ultra-cooperative to date and will continue to be."

The league could fine or suspend Manziel if it feels he violated its personal conduct policy, which was revised and strengthened last year following the high-profile case involving former Ravens running back Ray Rice. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

metr# OBITUARIES

SMITH, Ferne Bell

The family of Ferne Bell Smith are deeply saddened to report that she passed into the next world on October 22nd, 2015 at the age of 91 years.

Originating from the bright red mud of PEI, the early years saw her perform the role of an educator at Prince of Wales College. From there her career moved her into the area of research at Imperial Oil and then later Defence Research Establishment Atlantic where she utilized her skills as a trained chemist. At this time she also met her beloved husband Donald of 59 years who was an engineer in the lab. With the lab situated in Dartmouth, the City of Lakes became the home where she would live for the next 37 years.

Due to the blessed appearance of me on the scene in 1958, my mother left the lab to assume her new parental role. While the task at hand was to say the least a formidable one, she was up to the challenge. She continued to dabble in teaching as a substitute during my school years as well as an exciting career in real estate.

With her real estate career behind her and the retirement of my father they headed for the sunny south to enjoy many fantastic years in Florida at our Lake Worth condo. This also meant a change in residence from Dartmouth to Halifax where she lived the remainder of her life in their condo at Embassy Towers.

Mother was a bowler and a golfer but most importantly a serious bridge player. The Dartmouth Bridge Club of Critchton Park was a going concern. Bridge parties were the standard get together for the Dartmouth ladies. With their relocation to Halifax it also brought new bridge groups to engage in her favorite pastime.

The Waegwoltic Club was another source of entertainment for Ferne during the summer months. She would meet with her lady friends to chew the fat at pool side. Ferne's zest for life was unquestionable. The final years of her life were fraught with health issues. Her resolve to handle such adversity was incredible. She was known as the "energizer bunny" because of her ability to recover and live another day. The devoted attention and support of my father helped her through many of these hardships. It was truly exemplary.

My mother loved life and people. Her capacity for friendship was enormous. That was evident by how many have asked about her in the past few months. Life is about memories. The best thing you can do for our family is to think of a special moment with my mother as memories are everlasting. The little smile that memory will produce will be a testament to the joy you have shared with my mother. Thanks Ferne for the wonderful times that we have cherished together.

Ferne was predeceased by her father Fred Bell and mother Bessie (Linkletter) Bell of Borden PEI. She is survived by her loving husband Donald Ross, beloved son Perry Ross and daughter-in-law Alison Edwards.

Thanks is extended to the nursing staff at St. Vincent's Nursing home who took special care of Ferne in her last days. A private family gravesite memorial service will be held. In memory donations may be made to the VON or Dalhousie Medical Research Foundation or to a charity of choice. No flowers please. On line condolences may be made to the family via: www.atlanticfuneralhomes.com.

There is no stronger bond than that between a mother and her child. The love and nurturing over a lifetime does not die with death but lives on in perpetuity. I will think you of every day Mom – Luv

RECIPE Roasted Butternut Squash and Sweet Pear Soup

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

As comforting as your favourite nubby sweater, this soup has a subtle sweetness.

Ready in

Prep time: 20 minutes Serves 4

Ingredients

- 2 lb butternut Squash, peeled, seeded and cut into 2 inch chunks
- 3 shallots, quartered
- 3 heirloom carrots, cut lengthwise and then in half • 2 cloves garlic
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 1/2 teaspoon salt, divided
- 3 cup vegetable broth
- •1 cup milk
- 1/2 cup apple cider or water
- 3/4 cup pear puree
- · Sour cream or Greek style yogurt for garnish

- 1. Preheat oven to 400 F.
- 2. Place squash, shallots, carrots and garlic in a large bowl and toss with the olive oil and 1/4 teaspoon salt.
- 3. Spread vegetables in a single layer on a large, rimmed baking sheet and roast in the oven for 50 to 55 minutes, or until fork tender. Let cool.
- 4. Place vegetables and 2 cups of vegetable broth into a blender and puree until smooth. Pour the puree into a large sauce pan over medium-low heat and stir in the rest of the broth, milk, water or apple cider, pear puree and remaining salt. Allow soup to cook until hot for about 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. 5. Serve with Greek style yogurt or sour cream.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20 It's not like you to have such a thin skin. Get over worrying about other people's reactions, because you will soon have to do something that not everyone will agree with.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 Any worries about an affair of the heart will be laid to rest. You have never been more loved and admired. The sooner you recognize that fact the happier you will be.

Gemini May 22 - June 21 If a relationship of a practical nature is to be a success you are going to have to give ground. No matter how independent-minded a Gemini you may be you must make an effort to meet others halfway today.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 The next few days should get even better, especially if you have the courage to follow your instincts. Ignore those who dissuade.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 You must be decisive when dealing with others. If you give the impression that you don't know what you are doing they may lose confidence in you and go to someone else for the advice and assistance they need.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 You may disapprove of what a friend is doing but don't tell them. According to the planets they are being forced by events over which they have no control. Maybe you should support them. Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23. After the trials and tribulations of the past few days what happens next will be more to your liking. You may even receive news of a windfall that solves a financial problem. Will it stop your reckless spending habits?

M Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 Even if you are feeling a bit run down the Sun in your sign will revive you and give you a second wind. Be careful with money though. Spend less and save more.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 A positive attitude is essential. Whatever issues you have to face, you are big enough and tough enough to deal with them. The right frame of mind will get you the right result.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 Someone you meet on your travels could be very important to you career-wise. Once you have made contact be sure to develop a friendship.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 The Sun in the career area of your chart will make it easier for you to take center stage. But once you have made a good impression you must keep it going. It is not enough to be a star just for a day or two.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20 If you have a longing to travel, to visit faraway places, you will almost certainly be on the move over the next few weeks. The Sun in Scorpio will awaken your sense of adventure. It's time to start doing!
